Ayurveda

Ayurveda is one of the most ancient systems of medicine serving the mankind as the parent of all other systems of medicine. It is said to be the Upaveda of Atharvaveda, due to this fact this system of medicine possess a unique feature of being holistic, eternal, and practical. The river called Ayur Veda has its origin from the Vedas and flowing through the great classics called samhithas of great Acharyas of Ayurveda as Charaka, Susrutha and Vagbhatta.

Ayurvedic medicine is a system of traditional medicine native to the Indian subcontinent and practiced in other parts of the world as a form of alternative medicine. In Sanskrit, the word Ayurveda consists of the words āyus, meaning "longevity", and Veda, meaning "related to knowledge" or "science". Evolving throughout its history, Ayurveda remains an influential system of medicine in South Asia. The earliest literature on Indian medical practice appeared during the Vedic period in India. The Suśruta Sahitā and the Charaka Sahitā were influential works on traditional medicine during this era. Over the following centuries, Ayurvedic practitioners have also identified a number of medicinal preparations and surgical procedures for curing various ailments and diseases.

Gangoh is a historical town at the banks of river Yamuna in District Saharanpur, which is approximately 150 km North of New Delhi. It is about 40 kms. from three prominent industrial towns, i.e. Saharanpur, Karnal & Yamuna Nagar. The University buildings are contemporary, light and artistically designed and surrounded by natural scenic landscape.
